

Yesterday I remembered the beach in december 4 years ago & sprinting through the sand trying to catch up with my family before the sun set But the sun was already breaching the horizon line. and the orange hue obliterated my mission - I gave up stopped running gazed at the expanse

By myself on my knees something inside me changed
"there was a flashing, and everything
got burnt up", just like that There was emptiness, & widening identification reflections in the sky and waves
and in me,
I saw time stretching out as the sun angled a little lower around the edge of the world & everything I would do for the rest of my life seemed finished.
I remembered a dream I had as a kid of friends i would find the following year, at the gazebo in Hoboken

I looked down my feet were in water wading
a few inches, then my calves, thighs, chest I stumbled in fell face first into the moving black ice reflections shattered / vision obscured
Am I breathing?
or is there breath?
Dreams and reality crashing ocean & air still miraculous

I paddled out further I spit and choked and everything inside and everything outside was interchangeable essence I felt the narrative of my life fading

Yesterday I remembered this Ocean-memories -& consciously filtered them into an actual buzzing sound and 'sorbed it into all the cells of my body. Then I decided to live every day like I am on that shore swimming further and further out into the Great Myself Listen, I will not bother making sure I have enough strength to swim back to shore

I won't trade that exhilaration for anything.

Alright - Yea, I still remember my zip code - I went up then down then up then caught my feet and dragged it down to earth to keep as a little pet toy thing I check on every once in a while when I have the time to spare - Nah, I'm out on the wintry ocean, gasping.
Or, still wanderin' 'lo the forest with my eyes closed chanting baba, baba, baba

Ending:

Used to think I had to stick around but lookie!
my hands are movin' whole world keeps turnin' round, nothing's gonna wait for ME nor I for IT
I am here:

A perpetually calm evening hour like how it is after the day's activities have concluded and there's nothing to do but engage with divinity by candlelight.